Introduction

Dear Fellow New Yorker:

Providing our men and women who serve New York with the tools they need is critically important to me as Senator. Each year, the federal and New York State governments as well as private corporations distribute millions of dollars worth of grants and loans dedicated to modernizing and assisting those who are tasked with combating fire and protecting our communities. These grants provide funding for projects and programs ranging from educating the community on the vital work of firefighting organizations to supporting preparedness programs. With tightening budgets in a tough economic climate, New Yorkers should be able to utilize these programs to their full extent.

Finding the resources that meet your needs in the complex web of agencies can be a difficult task. Though numerous publicly and privately supported fire protection programs exist, many organizations in New York are unaware of the opportunities these programs offer. The information available in this packet is meant to address this fact, with the programs listed below detailing numerous federal, state and private programs that provide New Yorkers easier access to available opportunities for funding.

The information in this packet details fire program grants, and loans. As new programs and opportunities emerge, this guidebook will be updated to provide New Yorkers with the most information possible.

The guidebook is comprised of four different sections that provide information about various fire programs. Each section contains a list of programs with an associated basic description, contact information, and eligibility requirements.

My Senate website (www.gillibrand.senate.gov) is continually updated with critical information about new programs available to you, fire programs included, how to access these programs, and where to apply. If you require assistance securing fire grants, please contact any of the numbers provided in this packet, or my New York City office at (212) 688-7444. If you would like more general information on these programs, please contact my grant assistant, Jon Cardinal, at (202) 224-4451.

Sincerely,

Kirsten E. Gillibrand
